“ I loved Harry. He was the type of guy that at times could make you hate the fact that you did love him so. I worked as one of his caregivers at locust grove. He and i had this key saying " now don't get me started". It was a cute phrase that we would use in our debates of who was having the worst day. Harry really don't ask for much, but when he did want something he was very specific. Goodness be you were in a heap of mess if you forgot put sugar on his cantaloupe, or get a little held up on another duty. Harry was and still is a good man! He could make me laugh like nobody's business, he was a no bs kind of guy and that i could relate to. I will miss his words of encouragement, but i know that he's up in heaven probably taking notes on things that i could have done differently, that's just the nurse in him. Harry, this is what you wanted to go home,though it's hard to say goodbye,i can rest safely knowing your happy again. With continuous love, -crystal

“ I luv this picture of Harry--it's how I remember him. He became a treasured friend of my Gram's who was his neighbor at the high rise in West Mifflin. From the day she arrived, they bonded and looked out for each other. She passed away years ago now but I know they have reconnected and are catching up fast in Heaven. Rest in peace Harry and tell my Gram hello. :-) Hugs to you both!
